What kind of programmes do you watch on TV?

Do you ever watch films on video or DVD?

Do you ever go to the cinema?

What kind of films do you like?

What was the last film you saw?

Have you got a favourite film?

Does your country ever have film festivals?

In England, going to the cinema is one of the most popular leisure activities. Most towns have a cinema, usually one with several screens. These cinemas show all the big films from Hollywood in the USA, and a much smaller number from other countries. However, there are many festivals which show films that may normally not be shown at cinemas. The festivals last for several days and show many films. You are going to find out about two festivals in England.

Film Festival Season

In England it is currently film festival season. This week Sheffield hosts the International Documentary Festival, and next month there is the London Film Festival. Both festivals show new films from all around the world, with one essential difference. The London Film Festival shows fiction films, the Sheffield Festival shows factual films.

The Sheffield festival is now 11 years old, and it has grown from a small weekend festival into a week long festival that not only shows new documentary films, but also runs training workshops for new directors and has interviews with important film makers. Normally documentaries are only seen on TV, so, this festival, which shows the films in a modern cinema in Sheffield, is a great opportunity to see documentary films on the big screen.

There are films from all over the world, from Japan to Australia, from West Africa to Russia. In all, over 70 films are showing at the festival. The Chairman of the festival, Christopher Hird, says he is proud of how many different cultures and lives are represented in the film schedule.

The London Film Festival is a rather different affair. It has been running for nearly 50 years and it lasts for two weeks. The festival takes place in the largest cinemas in London and the attendance figures are high. It attracts many glamorous stars to the premieres of the bigger movies that are being shown in the festival.

The festival is an international showcase of cinema, but this year the opening and closing films are both British. The opening film is "Dirty Little Things" - a thriller set in the immigrant community in contemporary London. The final film is 'The Heart of Me' – a love story set in 1930s England, involving two sisters who are in love with the same man.

All in all, this is set to be a fabulous month for those who love to see the world up there on the big screen.

Follow up – Writing and discussion

Writing a film review and planning a film festival

1. a. Think of a film you have seen recently.
 - What was it called?
 - Who was in it?
 - Who directed it?
 - What type of film was it?
 - What was the basic story?
 - Did you like it?
 - What was good about it?
 - The story?
 - The atmosphere?
 - The acting?
 - The special effects?
 - Would you recommend the film?
 - b. Use your answers to the questions to write a small review of the film. Give your review to your teacher.
2. Look at the different reviews your teacher has given you. Work with your partner(s) and select some films (your teacher will tell you how many) for a new film festival in your local area.

Where will you show the films?

- At a cinema?
- In a community centre?
- Outdoors?
- At school?

Will your festival include other events?

- Meet the stars?
- Meet the directors?
- Interviews?
- Workshops on film making?

What will you call the festival?

- How long will it be?
- How much will the tickets cost?

Make a poster advertising your film festival

- Say where and when it is
- Say how much tickets are
- Give information about the films and events (make two sentence summaries from the reviews of the films you have chosen)

Look at the other posters. Which festival will you go to?
