

SAEL GUIDE

Practical guide to designing, running and improving support websites for language teachers

Annick Bonnet (coordination)

A guide dedicated to support websites for language teachers

Proficiency in several foreign languages and the acquisition of ICT skills is a strategic priority in Europe today. These new demands have transformed the way languages are taught across the European Union.

It is set against this backdrop of profound change that the SAEL project came into being. This guide, one of the final outcomes of the project, contains practical suggestions for creating and updating websites designed to support the work of language teachers.

A practical guide

- What is a language teacher support website?
- How are these websites designed, run and improved?
- Who is involved in this process and what are the main stages?
- Why does a support website represent real added value for the teaching community?

This guide sets out to provide practical answers to all these questions. It includes recommendations, examples of websites and good practices for setting up, improving and running support websites.

Download the SAEL guide

The SAEL is available in two languages English and French.

The guide can be downloaded from the project website:

<http://www.eurosael.eu/en/guide/presentation> (English version)

http://www.eurosael.eu/fr/guide/presentation_rubrique (French Version)

A printed version is also available and may be ordered on the SAEL project website.

Further information is available online

The guide is designed to be read in conjunction with the project's website (www.eurosael.eu).

Online users can read and download the project's research material (surveys, questionnaires, classification), the experts' research articles and the good practices in the «Guide» section of the website at www.eurosael.eu/en/guide.
