

How to get feedback on your teaching

Evidence of learning can help us to measure and understand if changes we make in our classrooms have worked. Feedback can come from our learners, their work, our own observations or those of colleagues.

Learners

Use questionnaires.
Get quick feedback after activities.
Include speaking activities that explore learners' opinions of their lessons.

Observation

Invite a colleague to watch part of a lesson and give feedback on specific points.
Record your lesson and observe it yourself.

Learner work and performance

Note participation during lessons.
Collect and review samples of learner writing and speaking.
Assess performance.

Reflection

Reflect during and after lessons.
Discuss your lessons with other teachers.
Keep a reflective journal.

'... asking learners for feedback and ideas helps show they are valued and that their opinions matter.'

Image: Getty Images

