

Asking Someone Out on a Date

- M1: Well, that's done it then. All the figures are up to date, all the projections are calculated and checked, and all the reports are filed. Ah, that's what I call a good day's work.
- F1: Mm, it certainly seems like we've got on top of it at last.
- M1: Yeah ... Um, Linda, I was wondering ... um, have you got any plans for this evening?
- F1: Er, this evening?
- M1: Yes. I was just thinking that maybe we deserve a drink or something, for doing all that hard work.
- F1: Yes, we did start early. At 8:30, didn't we? (yawns)
- M1: Oh. Yes. Of course, I mean, if, if you're tired, or something.
- F1: No, no, it's not that. It's just –
- M1: What?
- F1: Well, I did say I'd go round and see my mum this evening. She's always on at me, saying I'm ignoring her. You know.
- M1: Oh, well, if it's a problem ... Don't want to come between a girl and her mum, of course.
- F1: Oh. Well, I suppose I could always tell her I'll come over tomorrow night.
- M1: Oh great! So, a drink it is then, yeah?
- F1: Yes, why not? We deserve it, don't we?
- M1: Indeed we do! And then, maybe we could go for a bite to eat, nothing fancy, just a pizza or something ... or maybe go to a movie.
- F1: Rich ... are you asking me out on a date?
- M1: Ha! No! Ha! No ... well ... yes, I suppose I am.
- F1: OK then! I'll get my coat!
- (alone) Yes!

1'32

Contributed by

Derek Spafford